

Kapanda Secondary School

It's almost the end of the 2016/17 school year so we met with some of the Form One girls at Kapanda Secondary School to find out how they've found their first year at secondary school.

For me, this year has been very fine and nice. The biggest thing I have learnt in this year is to work hard. When you work hard, you pass your examinations. The hardest thing has been the distance to school, and that I don't always have food to eat until I go home. My favourite subject is English. I like mathematics, biology, geography, social studies and physics. Next year I will be reading, and working and studying hard.

This year at school has been very wrong because the teachers haven't been paid so it is very difficult to learn. Next year I have to study hard because the headteacher has told me that we will fail if we don't try hard. I've also learnt this year that early marriages are not good. When I eventually finish school I want to be able to help orphans and street children by paying school fees and shelter but that will only happen if I do well at school (and can get a job). This year was my first year at secondary school. I learnt how to show respect for your parents and guardians, and also how to study hard to get good results.

It's been a hard year this year because we have missed a lot of school time as the teachers were striking. I am afraid that I might get bad results in my exams. Other challenges have been that I live a long way from school and didn't have a uniform for a time too. The biggest thing I have learnt is how to take care of my life by working hard at school, reading books and to love education. I am going to work hard next year at school in my reading and assessments.
